FROM OUR ADVERTISERS

● Security Federal Credit Union employees Michelle Gauthier and Michelle Williams have been teaching high school students about credit unions as part of a new class that started in October and ends this month. Gauthier, member service representative, and Williams, head teller and trainer, teach the classes at the GASC Technology Center in Mundy Township. The class takes place two days a week and shows students how finances directly affect them and focuses on the possible careers in the credit union industry. The students took the program one step further and created two mock credit unions, which are designed to simulate a real-life work setting.
